Crash Unlikely to Set Back B-1 Shuttle Backers, Opponents See No Long-Term Effect on Bomber Is Finally

By Wayne Biddle

New York Times Service WASHINGTON -- Congressional supporters and opponents of the B-1 bomber say that the fatal crash of a test aircraft in California will have little long-term effect on the multibillion-dollar program.

The crash on Wednesday, which ared two others at Edwards Air Force Base, involved a B-1A proto-type aircraft built in 1976 that was ter modified to resemble the flight characteristics of B-1B production-model bombers.

It was the 127th test flight in the $14-billion Pentagon program to develop a new strategic bomber. The crash occurred just six days before the Reagan administration is scheduled to unveil the first production model of the new bomber as election-year evidence of its efforts to modernize U.S. strategic

A spokesman said that President

Ronald Reagan had been informed soon after the crash, but the White House had no comment. "It shouldn't be a setback," said itative Robert E. Badham a California Republican who has been a strong supporter of the B-1.

Those who support the program as I do are concerned and shocked and surprised, but my view is that it's one of those unfortunate things that happen in a test program."

The bomber has been a cornerstone of the Reagan administra-tion's weapons buildup, along with the MX missile and Trident submaad of U.S. nuclear weapons, consisting of land-based missiles, submarine-launched missiles and long-range bombers, the B-1 has represented the air force's bid to maintain a manned presence. The air force has touted the bomber's automatic terrain-hug-ging system and relatively low visibility to enemy radar as elements that would make it an effective 'nenetrator" into Soviet territory. But critics have contended that the B-1 lacks maneuverability and underpowered and would not significantly advance the capabili-ties of the present fleet of B-52 bombers. The B-1 soon will be made obsolete, they say, by new radar-evading planes known as

"stealth" bombers.
Because of the criticism and cost projections of $100 million a plane, Congress in the early and mid-1970s allowed design and develop-ment work on the plane to proceed very slowly and held back funds for full-scale production. President Jimmy Carter canceled the B-1 in 1977 under the belief that cruise missiles would make manned strategic bombers obsolete. Both the air force and the Rockwell International Corp., which builds the B-1, lobbied strongly through the late 1970s for a new lease on the bomber's life. Mr. Car-ter had allowed limited research, flight testing and development work to continue, and his decision not to kill the program completely made it possible for President Reagan to resurrect it in October 1981 as part of his military buildup.

The administration's budget re-quest for the fiscal year 1985 con-tained $7.7 billion for procurement of 34 of the B-1B aircraft. Initial models of the bomber, designated B-1A, have been used for testing purposes and are of a slightly dif-ferent design. Congress has limited the total B-1B purchase to 100 airequivalent of $20.5 billion in 1981

In Lebanon, Christians and Moslems Begin Mourning Period for Gemayel

BEIRUT - Moslems and Christians united Thursday in mourning Pierre Gemayel, the father of President Amin Gemayel of Lebanon and a dominant political figure from the nation's fight for indepen dence through its long civil war.

As preparations began for the burial, Mr. Gemayel's Christian Phalangist militia clashed with Druze Moslem fighters south of Beirut, and rival Moslem factions battled in Tripoli, bringing the number of deaths in the city to 23 in three days.

In much of Lebanon, church bells tolled, flags flew at half staff and radio stations played solemn music in tribute to the nation's most prestigious Christian leader. Mr. Gemayel, 78, the founder of the Phalangist Party, died Wednes-day of a heart attack.

The government has declared ree days of national mourning for Mr. Gemayel, beginning Thursday. His funeral was scheduled for Thursday evening in Bikfaya, the mountain village where he died, 10 miles (16 kilometers) northeast of

In his will, an official announcement said, Mr. Gemayel wrote that he wanted to be buried at the family cemetery in a simple wooden and Bashir's daughter, Maya, who was killed in a car-bomb explosion at age 4 in 1979.

Bashir Gemayel was elected ment in 1982, but was assassinated before his inauguration. His brother, Amin, was then elected president and has held the office for the last two years. Mr. Gemayel's death cast another shadow on the nation's chances of halting the nine-year civil war. Only former President Camille amoun, a fellow Christian and political rival, came close to Mr. Gemayel in national influence.

Lebanon's Shiite Moslem leader, Nabih Berri, and his Druze ally, Walid Jumblat, offered their condolences in separate telephone calls to President Gemayel. Prime Min-ister Rashid Karami, a Sunni Moslem, praised Mr. Gemayel in a statement read over radio stations. Arab heads of state and two Israeli leaders expressed sympathy with the Lebanese people over Mr.

Gemayel's death.
"I share your sadness over the loss of a father and a leading cabinet member of your administration," said President Hafez al-Assad of Syria said in a message to President Gemayel.

President Hosni Mubarak of Egypt cabled similar messages, and Prime Minister-designate Shimon Peres and Prime Minister Yitzhak Shadead and 44 injured the toll in three days of fighting between the Arabi-an Knights militia and the Ta-wheed Islami, or Islamic unificamir of Israel also issued statements expressing their sympathy.

Shamir, Peres Aim for End to Cabinet Talks

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispaiches JERUSALEM - Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir and the leader of the Labor Party, Shimon Peres, have agreed on an effort to com-plete talks on forming a national unity government within a week.

The state television and radio said Thursday that Mr. Peres, charged with forming a govern-ment by President Chaim Herzog, was ready to consider sharing the post of prime minister with Mr. Shamir in a rotation system.

But the two leaders said they had not discussed that vital question in talks they held Wednesday and had agreed to put it off until the end of

beginning of next week."

Deputy Prime Minister David Levy, seen as a Likud hard-liner in the unity talks, told Armed Forces Radio that the only solution to the stalemate was joint government.

He added that if the negotiations failed, "then there will be no escaping new elections.

Mr. Peres and Mr. Shamir resolved two of the main sticking points in their talks Wednesday, news organizations reported.

They agreed that new Jewish settlements in the occapied West Bank would be approved by a sim-ple majority in the joint cabinet. Armed Forces Radio said. Labor had demanded a two-thirds majority for such decisions, wishing to freeze settlement building.

Fires in Montana Have Blackened 250,000 Acres The Associated Press

HELENA, Montana - Fires pushed by strong winds that have burned 250,000 acres (100,000 hectares) of forest and prairie leaped fire lines and moved toward more homes Thursday. Reinforcements from seven states joined the battle to control the flames.

The Montana fires, most of which started last weekend and early this week, have destroyed more than 30 homes and forced more than 500 people to flee. There have been no firm figures on the total number of fires, but 18 have been declared "major." Residents of the 15-home El Dorado Heights subdivision were told to leave their homes

Wednesday after winds sent a fire toward them. The 5,000 firefighters were being supported by 42 air tankers and 21 helicopters dropping fire retardant chemicals and

Kuwait Is Said to Make Huge Oil Finds

KUWAIT (Reuters) — Kuwait has struck major new oil seams that could increase the life of its reserves to 250 years at current production rates, diplomatic sources said Thursday. The sources said that two newly discovered oil deposits could increase Kuwait's proven oil reserves to 90 billion to 100 billion barrels. Kuwait's proven reserves were assessed at 67 billion barrels at the end of 1983 which would last 175 years at present levels of output. The finds comprise large deposits of light crude oil in the Magwa field south of Kuwait City and highly sulfurous crude in a reservoir straddling the border with Iraq, according to the sources. Saudi Arabia leads the world in proven reserves, with 165 billion barrels. The Soviet Union has

140 Students Seized in Seoul Protest

SEOUL (AP) - The police said Thursday they had detained about 140 students in an investigation of anti-Japanese demonstrations to protest the first state visit of a South Korean president to Japan.

The most serious incident occurred Wednesday at a Japanese government information center, where several hundred students smashed wandows with rocks and bottles. The students then attempted to march on the Japanese Embassy and were turned back, but along the way broke windows in a police station.

The outbreak came on the anniversary of the 1910 annexation of the Korean peninsula by Japan, the beginning of 35 years of Japanese colonial domination. Students, political dissidents and religious groups still bitter about Japanese policy during the colonial period have staged protests of President Chun Doo Hwan's planned visit to Japan on Sept. 7.

Reagan Vetoes Public Radio-TV Plan

WASHINGTON (LAT) - President Ronald Reagan on Wednesday vetoed a long-range funding bill for U.S. public broadcasting, saving the increase in federal money approved by Congress for noncommercial radio and television stations was "too much, too fast."

The bill would have set a ceiling on congressional appropriations to the Corporation for Public Broadcasting, the nonprofit organization that distributes federal funds to public radio and television. The ceiling called for was up to $238 million for the fiscal year beginning in October 1986, then $253 million in 1987 and $270 million in 1988. Mr. Reagan said the proposed authorization figure for 1986 was 49 percent higher than the $159.5 million that has been allocated for 1985.

New French School Plan Welcomed PARIS (Reuters) - President François Mitterrand appeared Thursday to have scored a political success with a compromise plan aimed at ending a dispute over the reform of private education in France.

Presented Wednesday, the plan won a cautious welcome from both supporters and opponents of private schools. It is designed to replace a more-ambitious education reform bill that Mr. Mitterrand withdrew in July because of increasing public opposition.

The compromise involves technical changes in the way France's private schools, which are mainly Roman Catholic and which are attended by one child in six, get money from the state. The plan basically maintains the status quo by abandoning a promise by Mr. Mitterrand to integrate the private schools into a single secular education system.

U.S. Cities In a Survey

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — Despite the economic recovery, more than half of 388 U.S. cities responding to a survey cited unemployment as a "severe" or "substantial" problem, according to the National League

The group, which lobbies for cit-ies' interests, is developing a legis-lative package to submit to Con-gress in which it is expected to call for an increased federal role in the creation of jobs.

"Clearly, there is a need to create more jobs," Mayor George V. Voinovich of Cleveland, the organization's first vice president, said

The survey reviewed the employment situation in June and July, at a time when the unemployment rate unexpectedly rose to 7.5 percent from 7 percent. In that time, 45 percent of the respondents reported urban unemployment rates of more than 8 percent, while 22 percent of the cities in that group reported unemployment rates of more than 10 percent.

Need for Jobs EPA to Deny Eastern States' Request Cited by Most To Curb Acid Rain From the Midwest

WASHINGTON - The Environmental Protection Agency plans to deny petitions by New York, Pennsylvania and Maine asking for federal action to curb acid rain and other air pollution from sources in the Middle West.

The petitions, filed in 1980 and 1981, said pollutants from seven states in the Middle West were creating acidic precipitation in the three Eastern states, were reducing visibility, and were interfering with efforts by Eastern states to comply with federal air standards.

The petitions asked the environmental agency to invoke a provision of the Clean Air Act to require a reduction of sulfur dioxide emissions from power plants and other Wednesday that the Eastern states

Loneliness, Low-Level Jobs

Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — Lonely men in low-level jobs or with other stresses in their lives are four times more likely to die after a heart attack than are men with fewer emotional burdens, according to a

The study, conducted by researchers at the Health Insurance Plan of Greater New York, suggests that high levels of stress and social isolation are found much more frequently among less-educated heart-attack victims, diminishing their long-term survival chances in comparison with heart patients with jobs of higher status.

"It isn't education per se," said Dr. William Ruberman, who directed the research, "The explanation for the adverse effect of less education resides in the relatively greater prevalence of adverse life circumstances and difficulties in coping in this group." He said the study undercut "the stereotype that heart disease was almost the exclusive province of the high-achieving executive."

The influence of emotional factors on cardiac death has long been debated among heart experts. The new study not only supports the "notion of a causal role for biobehavioral stress" but also has

"profound and far-reaching implications" for the prevention, diagnosis and treatment of heart disease, according to an editorial accompa-

The Treasury Department, according to the officials, wants to examine the records of Marazul Tours Inc. of Manhattan to see if the company and its customers, particularly scholars, journalists and lawyers, have abided by restrictions on U.S. tomist and business travel to Cuba. The restrictions were established by the administration in 1982 and upheld in June by the U.S. Supreme Court. Lawyers representing Marazol said that one subpoena, served earlier this month, forced the travel agency to turn over to the government by Wednesday thousands of records, including the names of more than 13,000 Americans who Marazul did not provide the names, reporting that it did not keep a copy of the mailing list according to Harold A. Mayerson, a lawyer for the travel agency. Francisco Aruca, the owner of the agency, said Marazul sent the bro-chure to about 2,000 lawyers.

The restrictions on travel to Cuba, which were designed to sup-port a trade and financial embargo against the nation, bar ordinary tourist and business travel to limit the Cuban government's hard-currency earnings from tourism.

MANAGUA — The Nicaragnan government will send a high-level delegation to the Vatican next week to try to reverse worsening relations with the Roman Catholic Church and to seek an agreement regarding priests who hold public office, according to pro-government church sources.

Nicaragua Reported to Plan

The delegation, including two cabinet members, is scheduled to meet with Vatican officials on Sept. 6, but it was not clear whether the delegation would be received by Pope John Paul II, the sources said The principal causes of the church-state conflict are the con-

The government, in turn, has called the bishops pawns of the Reagan administration and part of a plan to overthrow their govern-ment. In June, the government produced a videotape purporting to show the Reverend Luis Amado Peña meeting with rebel agents and handling explosives. A Verdict in South Africa pronounced on South Africa's political re- eign opposition to it. Large Indian and mixedform. True, an earlier verdict had been delivered by the ruling white minority, which, consulting none of the other racial groups and least of all the disenfranchised black majority, last November overwhelmingly approved a plan giving a limited parliamentary voice to Indians and "coloreds." Both groups have now weighed in. Since they would presumably be the chief beneficiaries of what the sponsoring whites proudly hail as a "new dispensation," their verdict is of special importance. It is, on the whole, devastating. Only 20 percent of registered Indians voted for the new parliamentary seats being offered them, and only 30 percent of registered mixed-race voters.

Why such a minimal response? The whites administration had pronounced the November claim there was intimidation. The charge white vote authorizing the reform a mandate would be amusing, given the intimidation for "decisive" political change. The results of practiced by South Africa's whites — locking the latest elections have prompted the administration and pronounced the November white vote authorizing the reform a mandate for "decisive" political change. The results of practiced by South Africa's whites — locking up leaders of the boycott movement on the eve of elections, for instance - were it not a patent dodge. The evident truth is that most Indian and mixed-race voters boycotted the elections because they felt they would lose more than structive engagement" has borne, on the dothey could possibly gain by accepting a small, tightly hedged parliamentary role in a system still dominated by whites devoted to apartheid. In proposing the reform, the whites had

The verdict that counts most has now been simply easing some of the domestic and forrace majorities want no part of this game.

Prime Minister P.W. Botha's government seems bent on putting the plan into effect anyway with the parliamentary delegates elected by the few Indians and mixed-race citizens who did vote. His political situation may require no less. But it is clear that, notwithstanding the apprehensions of white super conserva-tives to his right, he does not have so much a strategy for change as a strategy for resisting change. "Oppression with a smile," is what the Reverend Allan Boesak, leader of the multiracial boycott movement, calls the Botha policy. The struggle within South Africa goes on.

Too hopefully, it turns out, the Reagan istration to express the further hope that the process of reform will be accelerated. This is awfully lame. No doubt the State Department is disappointed that its investment in "conmestic front at least, such meager fruit. It would be good to hear it say that the main obstacle to peaceful change in South Africa is, still, white racism, blindness and timidity.

Family Planning Helps

Even the most insightful and widely accept-riculture could still give the world time to ed theories can sometimes be pressed into the catch up with population growth without reservice of gibberish. Consider the argument, advanced against family planning by the Reagan administration, that poor societies should stop worrying about all those mouths to feed and get on with the business of free enterprise. It was the Reverend Thomas Malthus who argued that bare subsistence is the natural condition of man: Any surplus amassed through economic growth would be chewed up by a burgeoning population. But 180 years of history in Europe, North America and indus-trialized Asia have proved Malthus wrong.

Technological change, nurtured in an environment of relatively free, competitive enterprise has enabled those societies to acquire more wealth than population. And when average incomes attained comfortable levels the size of their populations began to stabilize. Thus it is widely believed that if poor countries could get over the Malthusian hump, popula-tion would indeed become self-limiting. That experience makes rapid economic development doubly important. It permits poor countries to keep starvation at bay while creating the social conditions in which people limit the size of their families voluntarily.

Most economists have concluded that successful development strategies in a variety of cultures are rooted in competitive enterprise rather than central government planning. Many economists also believe that no "population bomb" is on the verge of exploding. With luck, technological improvements in agsorting to coercive measures of birth control. But the Reagan administration's arguments are more extreme than this. It chooses to argue that government assistance in family planning has little practical effect on world living standards, perhaps even a perverse effect. "Population growth," says the White House, "is a neutral phenomenon." That is simply not true.

No theory about the causes of the demographic transition suggests that intelligent population control is irrelevant to development. Quite the contrary: People may well come to perceive the value of limiting family size long before they gain easy access to information about birth control, or the income with which to buy it. So at the very least, family planning programs have the potential to accel erate the demographic transition.

There is, in fact, plenty of evidence to show that assisting family planning can make a big difference. Taiwan, South Korea and Sri Lanka all managed, with the help of family plan-ning, to hold down population growth much more successfully than Western societies at a comparable stage of development.

Family planning is no substitute for sensible government policies that promote development through individual initiative. But family planning can ease the economic strain in developing societies. By contending otherwise, the Reagan administration reduces the odds of a decent life for billions of the world's poor. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

South Africa: A Vote of Silence difficulty of reforming a system designed to

The power of the boycott, passive weapon of the weak, can seldom have been so impressively demonstrated as it has been in the two elections for the new South African parliament of the three minorities. The official view in Pretoria seems to be that you can take a horse to water but you cannot make it drink; but once the new system is seen to work to the advantage of all concerned, all will be well. That can be achieved only by a combination of unprecedented generosity and diversion of finance on a scale which South Africa's economic troubles preclude. All this uproar has shown not only that there can be no real reform without the Africans, but also, and more ominously, that there is little enough readiness among the whites to acknowledge the fact, even if coloreds and Indians have shown they do. On this basis the new constitution is a step in the wrong direction.

- The Guardian (London).

Arrests, violence and, above all, a low turnout characterized the elections through which the white minority in South Africa intended to bring two other minority communities - the [mixed-race] coloreds and the Indians — into the exercise of power, These communities were hardly seduced by this "reform" of apartheid.

[Prime Minister] Pieter Botha, whatever discointment he feels, seems condemned to move ahead. His path is narrow. Whatever his true intentions, he cannot help but note the

- Le Monde (Paris).

Mr. Botha of "We must adapt or die" fame has, by changing course, shattered the unity of the "Volk," which Afrikaners set so much store by. The message of the colored election is clear: The aircraft has crashed, and it is necessary to go back to the drawing board. The arrest of the leaders of the United Democratic Front will not defeat the idea that there should be a nonracial opposition to apartheid; police with whips will not persuade striking students that they are wrong. What Mr. Botha has not done so far is to consult the [black] inhabitants of South Africa about what sort of adaptation is necessary if government is to be done with the consent of the governed.

- The Times (London).

The official policy of racial segregation prevents the black population from voting or holding office, and severely restricts their education, marriage, employment and places of residence. Last November the UN General Assembly voted 141-0, with seven abstentions, to reject Mr Botha's proposed constitutional changes as a "fraud" to perpetuate white mi-nority rule and apartheid. He should know that his tinkering cannot hide other harsh and ugly developments such as the brutal repression of all opposition, banning and detaining opponents of the apartheid regime and cracking down on independent black trade unions. — The New Straits Times (Kuala Lumpur).

The Islamic Revival: Khomeini Inspires a Third Force

T ORONTO — An Islamic current from Iran is surging through the world's one billion Moslems in the Middle East, Africa, Asia, the Far East, Ettrope and North America. Under the tutelage of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeir militant Islam is undergoing a reviv-al unknown for centuries. It is tak-ing in its sweep "moderate" Moslem leaders around the world who are being forced to implement various versions of Islamic rule.

Those resisting the sweep are under siege from a growing grass-roots army of Islamic dissidents demanding a radical, assertive, political Is-lam opposed to Israel and its chief benefactor, the United States.

Ayatollah Khomeini has loosed a force that may be the cutting edge of an emerging independent Islamic bloc —a third force after capitalism and communism. It could upset the U.S.-Soviet bipolar balance of powex. It could also challenge Israel.

The ayatollah has not singlehand-edly created this Islamic fervor. Nor does he have majority Moslem support - certainly not among the 800 million Sunni Moslems. There is no doubt that his Islamic revolution has lost its halo because of the American hostage crisis, the absolutism of his theocratic rule, execu-tions of internal enemies and use of tonis of internal ententies and use of child soldiers in the war with Iraq. Yet his Islamic regime has weath-ered huge economic and military pressures. It has pushed out America, held back the Russians, beaten back a Western economic embargo and worn down Iraq. And it has done this in almost total international isolation and without borrowing on the international market.

Proving his obituaries premature and outliving many of his adversaries, the ayatollah, who is 84, has created internal stability and put in place a state structure that almost certainly will outlast him. Abroad, he has become a catalyst for a popular worldwide Islamic ethos that is reaching beyond his circle of 200 million Shiite Moslems. He is attracting a dedicated band of followers, both Sunni and Shiite - people committed enough to suffer retaliation and, in some cases, ready to die. Lebanon has seen a resurgence of Islamic Shiites that could make them the country's most potent military, religious and moral force. Kuwait has deported 800 Iranians accused of various acts aimed at destabilizing the state.

The Gulf sheikhdoms of Bahrain and Qatar have foiled at least three coup attempts by Khomeini sup-porters. Members of the Islamic Front in Bahrain are said to be routinely detained without charges, beaten and tortured. The fundamentalist Islamic Enlightenment Society has been banned.

In Morocco, King Hassan accused Khomeini supporters of engi-neering the January riots against in-creases in food prices and student fees, which the king was forced to cancel. In Tunisia, President Habib Bourguiba also blamed Islamic fundamentalists and the Moslem Brotherhood for manipulating a replica of the Moroccan riots, sparked by price increases.

The Ba ath regime of Syrian President Hafez al-Assad has been ruthession of the Islamic Brotherhood, despite its good relations with the Khomeini regime. From 10,000 to 30,000 people were killed in the fundamentalist Moslem uprising in Hama in February 1982.

Iraq's President Saddam Hussein has been ferocious in his campaign against Khomeini sympathizers. He has expelled 200,000 to Iran since launching the war against Iran in Sentember 1980.

In Saudi Arabia, where Islamic extremists laid siege to the holy mosque in Mecca four years ago, the regime is said to be increasingly oppressive toward suspected Khomeini supporters. Still, Khomeini piotures and pro-Iranian slogans continue to appear in the region. Iran Air Force jet lighters fly over the area as a sign of solidarity with the Shiites, whom the Saudis have under increasing surveillance.

Egypt's President Hosni Mubarak has cooled relations with Israel, spoken up for the Palestinian cause and joined the Islamic Conference Organization. He is aligning himself with the Moslem world. So is the Sudanese president, Gaafar Nimeiri. After suppressing Moslem population of any nation (130 million), faces increasing ten-sion between the secularist Suharto regime and fundamentalists. President Mohammed Zia ul-Haq of Pakistan, who is known to dislike the Khomeni interpretation of the Koran, has instituted the Islamic punishment of publicly lashing people for "moral turpitude."

In India, which has about 70 million Moslems, the Central Intelligence Department is said to have stepped up surveillance of Iranian students and Khomeini sympathizers in the Shiite centers of Lucknow, Aligarh, Hyderabad and Bangalore, where they pass out Khomeim pamphlets at Friday prayers.

In Yugoslavia, 11 people have been jailed on charges of trying to establish an Islamic republic and secretly visiting Iran. In Bulgaria, where mosques have been demolished and women are not allowed to wear the hijah, surveillance and per-secution of Moslems has increased as the state media accuse fundamentalists of trying to camulate Ayatol-lah Khomeun's Islamic state.

Six years after he burst on the world scene, the ayatollah clearly exercises a messianic power not only over Iranians but over Moslems around the world

WASHINGTON — Unless the polls narrow significantly, we are going to be treated to a lot of hype about the terminal illness of the Democratic Party. The way to keep these prognostications in perspective nember that American politics is becoming more, not less, com-petitive. Even if President Reagan ould vindicate the polls and win by a landslide, the prospects for a maior political realignment - something akin to the 1930s, when the nocrats became the majority party — are neglizible.

Future elections almost certainly will continue to turn, as they have since the mid-1960s, on personalities and passing passions, not party loyal-ties. This assures the strong survival of both parties so long as each is able to field capable candidates and exploit the other's weaknesses.

The idea that large election vic-tories ought to translate into perma-nent political change has a long and inglorious history. The Republicans were supposed to evaporate after 1964 and the Democrats after 1972, and Watergate produced postmor-tems for the Republicans.

The stubborn refusal of each party to fulfill its predicted demise partly reflects both Americans' skepticism toward politics and the dynamics of personal ambition. No party can entrench itself easily, because popular distrust of entrenched power is too great. And when one party becomes top-heavy with older politicians, younger ambitious politicians move to the other party, where chances of advancement are greater.

But the deeper reason for the political standoff lies in the nature of the parties themselves. Politics is ultimately about the relationship between the state and the individual, and most Americans are confused about what that relationship is, or should be. Neither party is doing much to clarify the issues, because the dangers of doing so seem greater than the possible rewards.

Consider the budget delicits. These get to the guts of government: The deficits signify that we collectively want more in benefits than we are and the inherent virtues of free willing to pay for in taxes. But neither party has been very specific about how it would close the deficits — that is, about redefining the role of gov-ernment — because doing so risks

Arab-Americans in Chicago to lis-ten to their point of view on the Middle East conflict. They talked, Mr. Mondale disagreed with some of their points and each wrote out a alienating everyone whose taxes would be raised or benefits cut. With both parties muddled about government, the average voter has less reason for voting on the basis of party. The rise of the political indeident is well-documented. In 1952 only 23 percent of the voting popula-tion considered themselves independent; 36 percent considered themselves either "strong" Democrats (22 percent) or Republicans (14 percent). By 1983 independents were 35 percent, strong Democrats 16 percent and strong Republicans 9 percent. Likewise, the parties' deliberate ambiguity about the role of govern-ment has made conventional political labels increasingly meaningless. Anyone who followed the recent Republican convention must understand that "conservative" covers a multitude of not necessarily compatible views. Conservatives who want to outlaw abortion and legalize school prayer

In many respects politics has become more intense and ideological at requests that Israelis recognize the the edges - with single-issue groups ranging from anti-abortionists to environmentalists — and less intense and ideological at the center. markets. Because Franklin D. Roosevelt identified Democrats with the idea that government would human-ize markets, he altered the balance of political allegiance.

Three developments weakened the economic framework of the old Democratic coalition. Postwar prosperity reduced the emotional tug and eco-nomic relevance of the Depression experience. People who lived through the Depression began to drop as a proportion of the electorate. And new issues — inflation, Vietnam, women's role in society — arose that could not be compressed easily into a Depression-era ideology. Bipartisan acceptance of the basic ocratic idea that government ought to act as the economy's central arbiter has made it less useful for the Democrats. They once maintained their coalition by creating programs for their pet constituencies. But high deficits now foreclose this strategy, and they have yet to find new ideas to rekindle party allegiance.

The Republicans also have deep divisions. Economic and social conservatives often do not agree about the basic purpose of government. When the magazine of the Heritage Foundation recently asked 13 prominent conservatives about abortion. they got wildly different answers.
Consider the responses by economist
Milton Friedman and Paul M. Weyrich, director of the Committee for the Survival of a Free Congress.

ties. Political competition — in the sense that few elections are contested Mr. Friedman: "Whatever I might feel about [abortion] on a personal level ... it is an issue on which there is an enormous difference of view

... It is, therefore, utterly inappropriate for the government to try to impose the views of one large section of the population on the other Mr. Weyrich: "Abortion is wrong in all cases. I believe that if you have to chose between new life and exist ing life you should chose new life." So both parties lack the intellectual and emotional magnetism that makes for rigid loyalties. One party's good fortune often depends on the other's misfortune. In 1980, voters probably voted more against Jimmy Carter than for Ronald Reagan. In personalized politics, elections often mean less than they seem to. So long as parties remain ambiguous about the nature of government, voters will remain ambivalent about parfiercely — will be strong because par-tisan allegiance will be weak. This makes for interesting politics; whether it makes for effective government is an open question.

Focusing on Rome

OME — Off the Via Condott, the high promenade leading up to the Spanish Steps, is the studio of Cristina Ghergo, one of Italy's columned fashion photographers. why acclaimed fashion photographers.

A formidable, no-fuss woman with a ock of hair, she creates classy photos for aly's — and the world's — fashion maganes. But between jobs, and caught up in the arld of her artist friends, she can put to-ther light-hearted assemblages that poke n at the limits of visual expression.

It has not always been that way. For a long ne, she hovered over the abyss between iversity life and adulthood, especially afr the death of her father, Arturo Ghergo, a ill-known fashion photographer of the 30s. Photography was the furthest thing om his daughter's mind. Her mother held to the studio, in one of Rome's palatial wn houses — as Ghergo continued her adies, then hesitantly took over the studio id transformed it into an active contempory setting.

Her friends' avant-garde paintings, draw-gs and photos run up the walls of her fice. Bringing a cosmopolitan edge into the eart of Rome's bronze-toned monumental-- and into her work — they also hint at be new dimensions available to photogravers in Rome.

Photographs are now shown in art galler i. municipal exhibition spaces, staid 19th-ntury archives and in the awesome Coness Palace in the industrial park Mussolini ult on the outskirts of Rome. And near the anish Steps there is even an Alinari store. linari is no longer a photographic studio, as was when the Alinari brothers, the forefaers of photography in Italy, photographed e Tuscan landscape and the elite of Europe at passed through Italy in the 19th century. xday, the company wraps the old photoaphs into neat little albums glorifying orence or sentimentalizing Naples and schages contemporary names like Robert auschenberg and David Hockney.

At Il Fotogramma, the all-photography llery on the Via Ripetta, not far from one the Tiber's bends, dozens of contempory photographers gather. Giovanni Semerto, director of the gallery and a journalist τ the daily Il Tempo, sets the tone. He iblishes a journal, Immagine, prints books, nd salls photographs, including 19th-centuoriginal prints, at accessible prices.

But the sale of books and photos cannot upport the gallery. Semerano, like a patrich, has turned his gallery into a meeting aint for people who like photographs. At the end of the day, the photographers, ho work full-time elsewhere, stop by.

For Margaret Failoni, director of Il Ponte, gallery that specializes in art on paper (rather than on canvas or wood), photography will never "gain respect" and never pay for itself unless it becomes part of the art world at large. She shows the work of Americans and Italians, and arranges to sell Italian work in the United States. The Americans include George Platt Lynes and Robert Mapplethorpe, both photographers of male nudes; the Italians are harder to classify.

Dino Pedriali began with photographs of the hard world of alcoholism and dope, and

Although her shows pack in people from 14 to 70, Failoni says, "Photography is a money loser. You can sell books, posters, catalogs, but not original prints. Photography is not yet a collector's item in Rome."

ALTER Cantatore, director of the Galeria Giulia, a refurbished ground-floor labyrinth behind Romanesque arches near the Palazzo Farnese, agrees. Two years ago, when he held a show of the drawings and photographs of Felix H. Man, the Berlin- and Munich-trained artist, the gallery was jammed. Many drawings were sold, but only one photograph, a por-trait of James Hylton, the jazz player. Will the gallery show photographs again? Cantatore, smiling, preferred not to say.

Gallery, a converted palazzo in the shadow of the Pantheon, is stepping up his exhibition and publishing program in photogra-phy. Like Cartier-Bresson, whose work he sometimes shows, and who popularized the notion of a "decisive moment" in taking a photograph, Apolloni is seizing what he thinks is a decisive moment in spreading photography.

His speciality is mounting touring exhibitions by recognized contemporary photographers. Recently, he commissioned six internationally respected photographers to take photographs, each in his own style, of the Castelli Romani — the hill towns surrounding Rome. The subject was of enormous popular appeal and the work superbly crafted. Three of the photographers, Frank Fontana, Luigi Gherri and Vincent Castelli, were Italian. Juan Fontacuberta came from Spain. Edonard Boubat from France and Neal Slavin from the United States.

None of these people challenged the medium. From Fontana's dramatic spatial constructions to Slavin's iconographic groupings of people, the imagery was predictable if beautiful, an excellent cross-section of contemporary photographic vision. The photographs were blown up to hang at the Rondanini before they were sent out into the towns, and Apolloni is now publishing them in a portfolio and a book.

His next enterprise is an essay on the EUR, or Esposizione Universale di Roma, the monolithic giant of industrial planning The photographer will be Fontana — once again for publication and exhibition at Rondanini and in EUR.

ried out more than efficiently for Diaghilev's Ballets Russes, beginning with the 1917 pre-miere of the "Cubist" ballet, "Parade." The collaborators in this celebrated modernist succès de scandale were Cocteau, Pablo Piasso, Erik Satie and Léonide Massine. Picasso's magnificent original front curain for "Parade" has been at the Brooklyn Museum this summer (through next Monday) — having been brought from Paris virtually unheralded. The display is a major event in both the dance and art worlds. The scale and detail of the curtain's figures and composition stun the imagination. No printed reproduction nor any reconstruction or

EW YORK - "Astonish me,"

Serge Diaghilev commanded Jean

Cocteau, an assignment the then-young French enfant terrible car-first encounter with this curtain. "Astonish me" has been Diaghiley's most quoted phrase. No one understood the Rusnan impresano's thirst to be surdrised artistic renewal better than Cocteau. He had volunteered as idea man for the company as early as 1911 with "Le Spectre de la Rose" and had been responsible for the ballet "Le Dieu Bleu" in 1912. But it was "Parade" that launched Cocteau on the aesthetics of surprise that he was to infuse into all his ballets. even long after Diaghilev was gone.

revival can prepare one for the effect of a

The definitive study of Cocteau and the ballet has yet to be written. The most striking aspect about his ballets was that by definition, each consciously aimed to look unlike a ballet. I was reminded of this in May, when an excerpt from another Diaghilev-Cocteau production, "Le Train Bleu," was performed in Paris by the American dancer Kevin Haigen, in a memorial gala for the late Anton Dolin, who created the role in 1924. Bronislava Nijinska, the choreographer, and Cocteau had subtitled "Le Train Bleu" a "danced operetta." English audiences, indeed, saw it as a musical comedy without songs. Picasso here, too, designed a magnifi-cent front curtain — "La Course," with two Amazonian women running along a beach against a blue sky.

In 1921, Cocteau created the satiric ballet "Les Mariès de la Tour Eiffel" for the avantgarde company, Les Ballets Suédois. He himself mimicked the public's preconceptions. Was it a ballet? No, he replied in print.

This determination to work within ballet's precincts but to identify with theatrical devices that broke with standard definitions of ballet is Cocteau's signature. It was as true of his "Jeune Homme et la Mort" with Roland Petit in 1946 as of "Parade" in 1917, Massine's use of character dance and the vernacular idiom, Picasso's Cubist costume constructions, Satie's gentle music-hall tunes beneath Futurist machine-age sound effects made for a theater piece. Cocteau called "Parade" a "realist ballet." What he meant was that this collage of sound, movement and visual effects could convey deeper information (as Cubism did) about the real world than a naturalist representation.

The whiff of a plot concerned two managers, encased in Cubist constructions, and a horse consisting of two dancers. The managers attempted to attract a sideshow audience with acts from a Chinese conjuror, acrobats and a "little American girl," whose collage of movement was drawn from American film images (America as it appeared to a Europe-

Once the curtain rose, "Parade" looked obviously avant-garde. The mystery is why Picasso chose to be so figurative in his front curtain. Its perspective was influenced by Cubism, then 10 years old, but the scene depicted was surprisingly poetic and accessible. A ballerina reaches toward a monkey on a ladder. She stands on a winged horse who bends toward a foal. To the right, a group of figures - harlequin, sailor, matador, Moor and two women — surround a table with a classical landscape in the background.

HE French critic, Raymond Cogniat, has given the most cogent explanation for the fact that this curtain is more surprising than the provocative nature of what Picasso offered once the curtain rose. Cogniat points out that "Parade" is predicated on a reversal of values. Cubism here was made accessible to a wide public through humorous stage effects. Yet it was the ordinary that surprised most. The sight of a horse whose rear and front are two different men is an old clown trick. But its appearance on a ballet stage was jolting (and still is). The root of Cocteau's lifelong aesthetic - the rehabilitation of the commonplace — was already visible.

Cogniat saw the value reversal also in the fact that the managers in the Cubist constructions looked like moving decor. Dwarfing the dancers, they seemed more alive than the conventional dancers. One could also say that the reversal was embodied in the idea that an avant-garde ballet par excellence was opened with an idyllic scene, recalling Picasso's pre-Cubist circus period.

Nesta Macdonald, the British author of "Diaghilev Observed," has ventured a controversial theory about this curtain. In her book and in further research, she rightly points out that this is not a real circus scene that the figures are sitting on a stage framed by curtains, that these are not Picasso saltimbanques but persons disguised as circus folk. She and Marian Martin, an art historian, argue that the curtain is an in-joke with composites or faces of Diaghilev's entourage. The controversial aspect of her hy-pothesis stems from her identifications. In her view, the matador is a composite of Picasso himself and Satie; the harlequin is Massine amalgamated with the conductor Ernest Ansermet; the monkey, Léon Bakst; the Moor, Stravinsky; the clown, Cocteau; the sailor, Diaghilev, and the women, Lydia Lopokova, Olga Khokhlova and Maria Chabelska — dancers in the company.

Macdonald makes comparable identifications in Picasso's front curtain for the 1919 Massine ballet "Le Tricorne." The curtain, albeit cut, now hangs in the "Four Seasons" restaurant in New York. The curtain for "Le Train Bleu" is in Britain, where it was purchased "for the British nation."

To continue with this tale of three curtains, the "Parade" curtain has been stored, tightly folded, in the French National Museum of Modern Art at the Centre Pompidou. It is in New York as part of the "Cocteau Generations: Spirit of the French Avant-Garde" exhibition seen earlier at the Grey Art Gallery. Because of the immense space required (52 feet 6 inches wide, 32 feet 6 inches high; or 16 by 10 meters), it was hung along a curved grid at the Brooklyn Museum, in an open area that does it full justice. [On Monday, the museum held a seminar at which 24 experts from France and the United States discussed the future of the curtain, which is visibly discolored, and how best to preserve it, for the French authorities hope to hang it at the new Paris opera house planned for the Bastille. For an unsized piece of material, the curtain is in relatively good condition, but if it is to be continuously on show its environment will have to be carefully studied, a Brooklyn Museum official told the International Herald Tribune.]

Cocteau is the linchpin in these collaborations (he introduced Picasso to Diaghilev). It is easy to see his ballets as chic and playful. Surprisingly, they seem very alive when revived. That is why I was interested, at the Paris tribute to Dolin, in the athletic, tumbling solo that Nijinska created for him in "Le Train Bleu." Irina Nijinska, Bronislava's daughter, had hoped to have Dolin stage the full ballet in the United States. He had personally taught the role that made him a star to Haigen for the Hamburg Ballet in 1978. It was an amazingly good solo, acrobatics brilliantly incorporated into movement that Nijinska turned into "dance."

The Blue Train used to carry the beautiful people to the Riviera, and Nijinska peopled her beach with a golf player, gigolos, flappers, herself as a champion tennis player and Dolin as "Le Beau Gosse" (the handsome lad) in a Chanel bathing suit. Nijinska considered her ballet the sequel to "Jeux," which her brother, Vaslav Nijinsky, created in 1913. There was the same playing with sports movement for classical dancers, the same irony about social mores. Judging from the excerpt, it was a sophisticated ballet - typically Cocteau

Tuning in to Vienna's English Voice

by Alan Levy

etail of a Dino Pedriali study.

IENNA — Five years ago, a long-time English-speaking foreign resi-dent of the Austrian capital brought a batch of mail to his branch post fice and braced himself for his daily conontation with the bored civil servant bend the counter: the prototypal bureaucrat his mid-20s, already preparing for retireent, who couldn't care less.

Imagine, then, the long-term foreign resimt's amazement when this clerk greeted m with a sideburn-to-sideburn smile and a ry English, "Why, hello there, chappie!" Where had the baffled "chappie" heard at tone of extreme unction before? And hat could have happened overnight to ansform an aloof official's Viennese dialect to a simpering parody of John Bull? The iswer was playing softly in the back-ound: Blue Danube Radio, 102.2 on local M dials, the Austrian Radio's then-new nglish-language (and a little French) sta-in. It had taken to the air the day before, sted half the day by a breezy, British disc ckey named Paul Hollingdale.

Blue Danube Radio was launched in Auist 1979 - the day Vienna officially beme the world's third United Nations city th the erection of a skyscraper complex for veral UN agencies along the Danube. The station was a gesture by the Austrian Radio, or ORF, toward the internationalization of Jienna and an acknowledgment of the city's 46,000 English-speaking foreigners.

Independent and informal in outlook and just a little flaky, Blue Danube quickly attracted, to everybody's surprise, an audience of more than 400,000 in this city of 1,500,000. Most startling of all: 55 percent of all Viennese under 19 are "intensive regular listeners" who tune in for at least 15 minutes

This statistic is even more remarkable when one considers that Blue Danube broadcasts only five-and-a-half hours daily (7 to 9 A.M., noon to 2 P.M., and 6 to 7:30 P.M.), though its programming is followed mornings and evenings by that of the Austrian radio's short-wave service in French and English, so local residents can listen in on what Austria is telling the world.

Today, the familiar chimes of Blue Danube Radio resonate from cars, scaffolds, shops, offices, parks, and swimming pools within a 50-to-100 kilometer (31-to-62-mile) radius of Vienna, as well as within the international community it was designed to serve. For homework, many Viennese schoolteach ers assign essays in English based on Blue Danube, with the knowledge that, while very little programming is pedagogically oriented, it's what their pupils are listening to anyway and, as with Vienna's thriving English and International theaters and improving fortnightly magazine, Vienna Life, virtually all its talent is English-mother tongue

The eight Austrian provinces that lie largely outside range have asked for it and, until suitable transmitters can be built, the ORF-TV's second program, which seldom comes on screen before mid-afternoon, carries Blue Danube's morning and noonday shows as sound track behind its test pattern. Ever since this started last year, the station's call-in programs have been hearing from listeners in Switzerland and West Germany as well as Austria, though no count is kept of audience outside the Vienna area.

"Call-in programs were a novelty in Austria until Blue Danube," says Rudolf Klausnitzer, 36, who started the station. "The German language just isn't as well-built for quirky conversational improvisation as English or American - neither are our people." And such is Austria's authoritarian tradition that "If you stick a microphone in front of anyone, he or she freezes. Any moderator, even a disc jockey, is always a very official figure," he continues. "But some Austrians find English an easy vehicle for calling up and charting in public." Klausnitzer himself was virtually the first disc jockey in pop-culturally backward Austria when he began his career in 1968. Rising through the radio ranks as reporter, interviewer and moderator, he was named chief of the ORFs Third Program (the national pop-music network) in April 1979. The post, which he still holds, came with a mandate "to create something for our foreign guests" with 10 million schillings (then nearly $1 million) of federal money. With harder times and a shift of government, the budget has been pared twice — it now stands at 6 million schillings - and Blue Danube re-cently took to selling time for English-language commercials at 50 Schillings (less than $2.50) a second to appropriate sponsors such as moped manufacturers and teahouses.

LUE Danube's "Good Morning, Vienna" program, which has the most listeners, has been much the same since the station began: After a few bars of "Oh What a Beautiful Morning!" and a brief welcome, there are a couple of minutes of news headlines in English and French. Then music, music, music (Bruce Springsteen, Barry Manilow, Bonnie Tyler, Michael Jackson and the Alan Parsons Project recur) punctuated by weather, traffic and sports news, features and what's going on in Vien-na, an occasional song in French or Italian and, on Sundays, church announcements.

The "presenters," as the disc jockeys are called nowadays, change every three weeks, not just to avoid their paying taxes and ORF's paying social security, but also, says Klausnitzer, "so they don't feel too much at home here. We want them to keep the outside perspective of foreign guests. We started out with an all-British team because England is so near, but this way, while we can't afford the air fares from North America and Australia, we get some of their 'presenters' who are vacationing in Europe and could use three paid weeks in Vienna." One drawback is that some of his imports have trouble with Енгореан патез.

Special ceremonies - such as the last U.S. presidential inauguration and British royal wedding, recent Oscar awards and the funeral for Anwar Sadat in 1981 — televised live by the ORF with German commentary or voice-over, have been broadcast in English over Blue Danube, so the viewer could turn down the TV sound and turn up the radio. Other special events shown this way include Wimbledon tennis, World Cup soccer. U. S. election results and the original version of an occasional film or TV special that has been dubbed or voiced-over for the ORF.

"We thought at first that we could do a movie a week this way," says Klansnitzer, but we found that, when movies are dubbed Munich, they snip film, too, so we couldn't synchronize the original with the ORF's version." When "The Thorn Birds" TV series, which was shown dubbed by the ORF, is re-run this fall, however, viewers will have a chance to hear the original sound track on Blue Danube.

His biggest headache, Klausnitzer admits, has been the "Midday Magazine," except on Sundays, when the first hour is devoted to call-ins. With Madison Avenue-style upheavals, it changed format several times as it staggered from general interest to housewifeoriented (shopping and gardening tips) to cultural (serialized condensations of Christopher Isherwood's "Prater Violet" and Jon-athan Carroll's "The Land of Laughs" read by the author, who teaches English at the American International School of Vienna) to service (half-hour interviews with an allergist, nutritionist, oncologist, and so on) be-fore targeting in on "the bubble-gum crowd" of young Viennese workers and bored international housewives.

Late last year, when the British stage ac tress Adele Leigh (resident in Vienna with her diplomat husband) interviewed composer René Staar before the premiere of his requiem for Anton Webern (1883-1945), who was shot to death by an American GI in a black-market raid in Salzburg province, her voice was deemed too plummy for "the bubble-gum crowd" and her questions were snipped out and read instead by a disc jockey who misread "Tell us about the soldier who killed Webern" as "Tell us about the soldier who kidded Webern."

Aware of his midday sag, Klausnitzer promises reforms this autumn: "We want to build a bridge for the international community, not a ghetto where they can live their entire Viennese life in English. Maybe we should do at noon what we're starting to do in the 'Evening Roundup': putting in a little more coverage of Austrian events. If, at lunchtime, with some deeper interpretive reporting of what's happening around them, we can interest the wives in participating in Austrian life, then the husbands will surely By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — The news about carbon dioxide is bad. Apparently there is far more of it in the air than there used to be, because everybody burns a lot more coal and oil than we did 100 years ago, and the byproduct of that is carbon dioxide.

All this excess carbon dioxide just might change the earth. We are ing that while more of it makes plants grow faster, bigger and fat-ter, it does not increase the growth rate equally for all plants.

You can see what this may lead to. Thistles 50 feet tail. Ancient oaks that don't reach your knee-

Bazzaz is speaking of "catastrophic effects in some ecosys-tems." We must put aside the scientific double-talk and try to visualize what this might lead to.

Suppose, for instance, that tomato plants are among those that dominate, thanks to their sensitiv-ity to carbon dioxide. Suppose here comes a time when everybody's tomato plants grow nine or 10 stories high.

If that possibility doesn't shake you, you are a cooler customer than am. When I think about the coming of the 100-foot tomato plant, I am tempted to respond as my grandfather would have responded in 1904 if I had told him that someday tax chiselers would be able to leave the United States at breakfast, fly to Europe for lunch, then fly back to the United States in time for supper.

"I hope to God I never live to see anything like that," the old gentle-man would have said. This is what I say to the 100-foot tomato plant. and don't bother telling me about all the advantages — how the toma-toes will be twice as big as pumpkins, and how there will be so much leaf that tomato worms will eat themselves to death without making a dent in the plant. know how these things work.

Tomato plants 100 feet tall are bound to attract lightning. When you're caught out in a thunderstorm you'll have to remember not to stand under a tomato plant.

If you're not hit by lightning, the thunder will probably shake down a lot of tomatoes twice as big as pumpkins, it wouldn't take many hits by those to ruin your best suit.

What's more, it is riduculous to talking about a gas that makes suppose that once tomato plants plants grow, and scientists are find-grow that big, tomato worms will suppose that once tomato plants remain their present size. As my grandfather understood, the size of the pest always expands to match the size of what it feeds on.

The old gentleman enunciated this principle shortly before his death in 1905 when Grandmother I can give you the scientific told him that someday every house

"I hope to God I never live to see anything like that," he replied. And when Grandmother asked why, he said, "As long as I don't have one of those telephones, I'm too small a target to be hit by anybody who isn't both literate and organized, and you know how few of them The 100-foot tomato plant will swell the tomato worm just as the telephone has swollen the number of pests who can get at you for money without having to know how to write their own names. I don't want my grandchildren living in a world where tomato worms grow eight feet long. No-body does. This is why it's time we started getting all this carbon dioxide out of the air and into the sodapop bottle where it belongs. As my grandfather would have said, "The world is being transformed too much already without giving carbon dioxide a free hand." He didn't say this, of course, because he knew nothing about carbon dioxide. He did say, though once when Grandmother told him Americans would someday be able to blow up not only the entire county seat, but also the whole world - "I hope to God I never live to see anything like that." That I can live with. This carbon dioxide is something else.

Surviving Slump A Log at a Time

RIPPLE HORSE CREEK Montana - With the slow brightening of the sky in the east shortly after 4 A.M., the ragged hulks of the mountains, some still carrying snow, start to take on shape. Gradually, the black mountainsides turn green as the sun touches thousands of towering pines with more and more light. The shape of the forest emerges to roll on as far as the eye can see in this isolated northwest corner of Montana. Dawn has come that way to many of these trees more than 30,000 times in the near century since they were seedlings.

"Beautiful, ain't it?" said Wade Nixon, as he strapped on his large, rattling equipment belt, donned his green, rippled-steel hardhat and picked up bottles of oil and fuel. Then he hefted his big chain saw from the back of the pickup truck and started down the hillside.

The smiling Nixon is a freelance faller, a gypo, a sawyer or — as the men never call themselves — a lumberjack. He was hired to help harvest a section of Cripple Horse Creek, heavily infested with bugs, before rot sets in and the 90-year-old National Forest trees become worthless.

It is a job, falling big trees for the vast U. S. lumber market, that Nixon has done for 12 of his 31 years, despite the warnings of another faller, his father. The son's arms and legs bear the scars of chainsaws run wild. He has survived large limbs, dubbed widowmakers, plummeting silently from above.

He has survived lightning storms and blizzards, encounters with bears and mountain lions and the bitter cold that penetrates even thick canvas trousers to sting his legs all day. He has also survived the cyclical sadness that so regularly strikes one-industry counties like Lincoln, at times throwing one man in three out of 1.8 million workers whose fortunes usually herald U.S. eco-nomic trends. Wood, its extracts and byproducts are essential to American life in everything from plasma and film production to umber and paper.

It takes one cord of wood (a stack four feet tail, four feet deep and eight feet long) to make 942 one-pound books or 4,000 onegallon milk cartons. It takes 20 cords to build an average house.

Lumber prices, an indication of strength in the housing market, which affects many other industries, have been falling for the past four months. The price of two-by-fours, for instance, which form the basic framework of single-family houses, has fallen from $201 per thousand board feet a year ago to $140.

Although the Commerce Department announced last week that housing starts fell by 6.6 per-cent in July, the latest annual rate of 1.76 million units still seems high by historical standards. But, according to Michael Sumichrast, chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, the figures mask some basic shifts.
Hidden within the numbers is the fact that a growing proportion of housing starts come from multifamily units — long-term, hard-to-stop projects that use more cement than lumber. Single-family houses, more subject to the fears of consumers over inflation and mounting interest rates, have been dropping even faster, declining by 10.1 percent last month.

"Everything in housing is down in the last three months. adds Sumichrast. "Right now, the figures still seem high due to mo-mentum. But come fall you'll see considerable down impact on the

Nixou need not wait until fall for the lesson. This summer the St. Regis mill in nearby Libby announced that because of decreased demand it would take log deliveries only four days a week and only from those loggers under company contract. Independent loggers like Nixon, who had been buying plots of standing timber to harvest on the gamble they could deliver it to St. Regis at a profit, were suddenly left without a market. St. Regis also began buying logs from Canada, where the strong American dollar buys more.

To earn a living, many like Nixon signed on with contract loggers as hired hands. Though a skilled faller, Nixon spends most of his time here "skidding" 12,000 logs fallen last winter. He were the rine behemoths in wraps the pine behemoths in chains and drags them with his tractor-like skidder to be piled at the roadside for pickup by the logging trucks that growl their way slowly through the hills with 30-ton loads. Skidding is hot, dangerous work on steep hillsides. If his equipment breaks down, Nixon's work halts, along with his pay.

"All I want to do," he said, sipping coffee as his pickup truck bounced along a dirt logging road, "is work hard and make a living. But we're dealing with an economy now where you go from one extreme to another in 30 days. This spring everything was 'go' and guys were buying ma-chinery. Then suddenly every-thing's tight. Guys go into the woods in the morning and by afternoon they're out of work. How can anyone plan a life on that? I can deal with the weather, the breakdowns and the danger.

But the uncertainty -But then the former cowboy, who has never been more than 300 miles from this area, adds: "The woods, they get in your blood, you know, the trees, the animals, the view, the smells and sounds, the independence. I keep saying, Tru quittin' loggin', I'm quittin' loggin'. But I reckon like those trees I'll likely be here 'til my end."

Salvador Dali Burned

Salvador Dali, 80, suffered first-and second-degree burns of his right leg in a fire that broke out in his bedroom while he was sleeping Thursday, his doctor said. Dr. Juan García San Mignel said the painter's burns were not serious. The fire, which started about 5 A.M. in Dali's bedroom in his 12-century castle at Pubol, Spain, apparently was caused by a short circuit in the electrical installation of the castle, police said. His nurses said friends rushed into Dali's room after the fire was discovered and removed him from the chamber. Dali's health has been weak in recent months, the doctor said, adding that his patient was in good coudition and was "resting peacefully."

Elizabeth Taylor has broken her engagement to Victor Luma, a Mexican lawyer, according to reports published Thursday. Taylor has returned a 16%-carat sapphire-anddiamond engagement ring Luna gave her last August, the New York Post and New York Daily News said. Luna was quoted from his offices in Guadalajara as saying the breakup was amicable, adding, "She gave me a lot of happiness. We are still wonderful friends and we intend to continue being friends." On Thursday, Taylor attended a memorial service in Lon-don for Richard Burton.

Prince Albert of Liege, brother of King Bandonin and heir to the Belgian throne, was injured Thurs-day when the motorcycle he was riding skidded and fell, police sources said. The 50-year-old prince reportedly cracked some ribs and sustained scrapes from the friction as he fell onto the road. north of Frejus, France, on the Cote d'Azur. The prince, accompanied by Prince Paola, had been making a brief visit to France after a vacation in Sardinia. П

Frank Sinatra canceled an Atlantic City nightclub engagement, accusing a New Jersey state official of insulting and demeaning him. Sinatra, who was to perform Sept. 5-9 with Dean Martin, said he would not appear at the Golden Nugget in the East Coast gambling city. The singer's attorney, Milton A. Rudia, said, "Frank Sinatra has asked me to announce that after much personal reflection, he has made a per-

A traveler in Africa may become bewildered at the numbers and names of the Changing money is no problem in the French-speaking countries where the C.F.A. franc is in circulation. The banks all give pretty much the same rate and there is no black market. The shop-switch is a gimmick common to more than a few countries, but it is seldom done with the finesse that is practiced in Bangkok. An example should suffice. In Bangkok, we visited the Jim Thompson House, which the American architect assembled from six old Thai houses when he settled in Bangkok after World War II to devel-op the local silk industry. In 1967, Jim Thompson vanished during a walk in the jungle in Malaysia. His house is a major tourist attraction, not least because it contains a marvelous collection of Southeast

But the dispatcher of taxis in the courtyard insisted that we would do better at a little shop that he knew about. We declined and the dispatcher sent us off with animated instructions in Thai to the taxi driver, who, sure enough, tried to dump us at a seedy emporium across town. I was armed with a city map and made him take us back to the vicinity of the Jim Thompson shop, where my wife and I continued off persistently on shop by a bank clerk on his lunch hour. The defense against such deception is to arrange a taxi through your hotel that will wait while you sightsee and shop, though it can be more expensive. Failing that, buy a city map and have the hotel concierge write out clearly in Thai where you want to go.

JAPAN

Japan presents relatively few dangers for the traveler. Crime is rare and merchants are honest. Still, there are some other potential pitfalls that travelers should avoid. The most frequent tourist problem encountered by the U. S. consulate is that visitors arrive without a visa because they mistakenly assume that one is not needed for Japan. Japan will grant a 72-hour "shore pass" for such visitors, but after that they must leave. It is possible to go to Taiwan or Korea to get a visa, but such a side trip adds to the expense and can min a

In getting around, the greatest difficulty is that taxi drivers do not speak English, even in cosmopolitan Tokyo. When venturing forth, visitors should carry around the name of their hotel written in Japanese characters so they can get back. Also, Japanese cities do not have street addresses and it if difficult for cab drivers to find places that are not ili known without careful instructions Restaurant prices are high and are not always listed, especially in sushi bars. The chef serves piece after piece, keeping track of the bill in his head or by stacking kernels of rice in a way known only to him. By the time the customer is finished, the bill might be $40, with no written record of it.

One other piece of advice: Always carry tissues or a handkerchief. Japanese restrooms often lack paper towels and restaurants don't offer napkins. This is especially a problem if one cannot use chopsticks. In such a case, a tourist might come away from a sushi dinner not only $40 poorer, but also with soy sance on his best suit.

MEXICO CITY

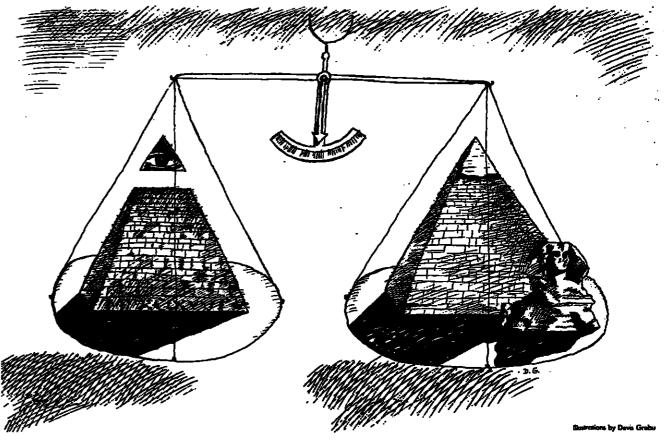

The offers begin as soon as a visitor walks out of the customs area at the Mexico City airport. "Taxi, sir. Would you like a taxi, sir? Taxi to the center, sir."

The barrage of shouted offers for a taxi, however, aren't from cab drivers licensed by the city. They are independent or "pirate" cabs. Like their New York City counterparts, these cabs promise cheaper service, but usually end up charging higher rates.

It's easy to avoid these unofficial cabbies.

Outside the door of the airport's arrival areas, there are small kiosks and ticket windows. These booths sell tickets for red-stripe cabs, which charge around 1,000 pesos for a ride to the main hotel zones. There are also SETTA cabs, which are more like the Share-

-Cab services offered at many American airports and charge 225 pesos a person.

Another sure-fire place to get in trouble is the Garibaldi Square after the early evening hours. Garibaldi is famons for its mariachi bands and many city-at-night tours whisk tourists in and out of the square for a quick glimpse and maybe a few songs from one of the bands. But Garibaldi is just off one of Mexico City's high-crime-rate areas. It's a place where thieves prowi looking for unsuspecting or inebriated targets. movie or video cameras. The plea that your gear is for boliday fun may or may not work. Several travelers have reported their video cameras were impounded at the airport, although they were returned on departure.

More serious: The police report that crime in this city of 5 million people has doubled in the last year. The young purse-snatchers of the past have been joined by grown men and women, often carrying guns or knives. And as tourism grows and charter flights are now bringing more and often less experienced travelers, the list of muggings and assaults of foreigners is getting very long. To be fair, it also happens to the Brazilians. But observing these basic rules, which are rarely provided by the hotels, may get you by unscathed: Wear no jewelry at all and only a cheap watch. Keep your camera out of sight, unless you're standing on the Sugar Loaf. All beaches and buses have become notorious for theft, so take nothing along you would not want to lose. If you go into the water, commend your towel, shoes, glasses to a neighbor who does not know you but will respond. One of the few safe beaches is by the Hotel Sheraton, which has its small patch patrolled by its own security in bathing suits. Also, do not swim in the famous Guanabara Bay, which carries raw sewage. And on the main beaches, stay away from the canals that spew their unclean waters into the sea. After-dinner strolls in Copacabana or -? panema are positively dangerous. Savvy locals go for early evening walks only if they are dressed as joggers and go along the ocean

400% PROFIT A philosopher has observed that "Victory has many fathers, but defeat is an Orphan". Now that the DOW has rocketed, virtually every oracle is taking credit for predicting a rally, ignoring their pre-August bearishness.

On July 13, 1984, while the Averages were sagging, we stated..." The dynamism of Shakespeare's Prospero will cataput the DOW beyond 1500". Two weeks later, we published an editorial, (July 26, 1984) writing... "THIS REMAINS A CLASSIC TIME TO BUY, NOT TO SIGH", adding: "THE MARKET WILL ERUPT AGAIN, VAPORIZING PROPHETS OF DOOM'

In the summer of 1982, while the DOW was drooping, C.G.R. commented... "THE DJI WILL HIT 1,000 BEFORE TOUCHING 750", a prophecy that seemed heretical. Perhaps our most riveting thought was articulated in 1982, when we wrote... "For the first time in decades, stocks once loved seem frigid, selling below book value" Given the spastic speculation in seem ingid, selling below book value." Given the spastic speculation in commodes and other collectibles, equities, in today's climate, appear cheap in an investment arena where almost everything but stocks are fully priced. "In many ways", we added, "pessimists are modern day versions of Tantalus starving to death in the midst of abundance; the crystal stream flows near their lips, but falls away when they drink it. lesearchers Progressing OO PROR n Hay Fever Treatment

By STUART DIAMOND

New York Times Service EW YORK - For 18 million Americans - and unknown millions of others around the world - this is the traditional high point of the annual hay fever season. But recent advances in medical technology, wever, have produced increasingly effective, more rapid, less the treatments for hay fever. Some have recently been introed; others are just coming to market. Research now being ne may make hay fever a malady of the past.

The basic information on allergies has just burgeoned," said. Jordan N. Fink, president of the American Academy of ergy and Immunology. Many drug companies are developing sducts for the large international market.

The benefits span nearly every business: Figures from various deral agencies indicate that five million workdays a year — information on allergies has just 'Hay fever' is a misnomer. loes not come from hay and burgeoned." uses no fever. The name was med 150 years ago in Briti, when people associated the runny nose and congestion nptoms of fever - with the autumn hay harvest. Instead, hay er stems from a complex chemical reaction of the immu stem of some people to proteins in pollen released from trees, uses, weeds and fungi and breathed in from spring to antumn. se condition is called "allergic rhinitis," meaning an inflamma-

n of the nose from an allergy. In most people, pollen proteins are destroyed by the body's fense mechanisms. But hay fever sufferers have an inherited idency not to destroy the pollen proteins but instead to oduce another protein, called immunoglobin E, or IGE, in sponse. Both the hay fever proteins and the IGE attach them-ves to certain body cells called "mast cells." These cells then nit the chemicals that cause runny nose and other allergic itation. The best-known chemical is histamine, but there are rhaps 10 others.

The first defense against hay fever, medical experts say, is oidance: staying in an air-conditioned room on bad days or far m sources. But avoidance — by traveling, for example — is pensive and inconvenient.

The next defenses are antihistamines — which block the itation caused by histamines -or decongestants, which reduce flammation, itching and runny nose. But antihistamines tradimally cause drowsiness as well, and decongestants are progresely less effective after a few days.

N alternative, oral steroids, also eases hay fever symptoms, but can produce side effects such as higher blood pressure, more facial hair and thinning of bones. None of these ugs stops production of the irritating chemicals.

Immunization is considered the most effective because it tacks the causes of hay fever. It works somewhat like a vaccine: allen proteins are injected and the body gradually becomesmune. Less IGE, histamine and other irritants are produced. The problem is that the injected pollen proteins can cause a ajor allergic reaction, so the process must start with very low ses and gradually be increased. Many dozens of shots are often quired over several years: It is costly and can be painful.

Against this backdrop, research has mushroomed. "Every impany that puts out an antihistamine is involved in new search," said Dr. Lynn Britton of Schering-Plough in Kenilorth, New Jersey. One new product Schering sells is Vancenase. steroid sprayed into the nose. It acts locally, not systemically,

VW Loss Widened In Half

Deficit Blamed On Recent Strike

WOLFSBURG, West Germany Volkswagenwerk AG, West Germany's largest automaker, said Thursday that its loss widened in the first half of 1984 from a year earlier, largely because of a nation-wide strike by metalworkers that paralyzed the auto industry in May

Despite a reporting a profit in the first quarter, the company's loss for the half widened to 162 million Deutsche marks ($56.3 million), compared with a deficit of 147 million DM in the first half of 1983.

Worldwide sales of the Volkswagen group rose 11 percent in the first half to 22.26 billion DM, from 20.12 billion DM a year earlier.

In the past two years, Volks-wagen has reported combined losses of more than 500 million DM. The company returned to profitability in the last quarter of 1983 and the first quarter of 1984.

A spokesman for Volkswagen Ortwin Witzel, said Volkswagen was confident it would earn enough in the second half of 1984 to show a profit for the full year. He said the company geared up production in the usually slow month of July, trying to regain the momentum it had in the first quarter, when it earned 51 million DM.

Mr. Witzel said in a telephone interview that "domestic and Euro-pean demand as well as demand in the United States remains good," although sales in Latin America are unsatisfactory.

The company said the metalworkers' strike caused its factories to miss production of about 160,000 cars at the parent company and its major car-making subsidiary, Audi ÁG.

The strike for a shorter workweek closed important parts suppliers, paralyzing the auto industry for 50 days in May and June.

U.S. Presence of Japan Banks Grows

How U.S. Unit Of Mitsubishi Helped a Client

New York Times Service
SAN FRANCISCO — Mrs.
Fields's Chocolate Chippery spent a frustrating year trying to rent space for a store in Tokyo before turning to its bank, Bank of California.

In short order, the bank's parent, Mitsubishi Bank Ltd. of Japan, helped the Fields organization rent a storefront in the Ginza shopping area — not a major business transaction, perhaps, but a clear demonstration of how Mitsubishi can help the Bank of California attract the medium-sized corporate clients it wants as the core of its business, according to BanCal's chairman, Ross P. Williams Jr.

For Mitsubishi Bank, the transaction provided a valuable glimpse of how to tap a segment of the U.S. market, one in which Mitsubishi has very little experience, according to Junji Hatano, BanCal's new executive vice "One of the main purposes in buying the bank," Mr. Hatano said, "is to have a better ap-proach to the American middle market" --- which he defined as panies with values of $5 miltion to $200 million.

Orders in U.S. Rose 1% in July; Retail Sales Up

WASHINGTON - Orders to U.S. factories rose I percent in July, partially reversing a decline in June, the Commerce Department said Thursday. Major U.S. retailers, meanwhile, reported moderate sales gains in August compared with a year ago.

The Commerce Department said new orders to U.S. factories rose $1.8 billion last month to $192.5 billion. The 1-percent increase followed a 1.6-percent decline in June. But orders were still 2 percent below the high point reached in

Also Thursday, Sears, Roebuck & Co., the biggest general retailer in the United States, said its sales rose 8.1 percent from August 1983. The second-largest, K mart Corp., reported an 11-percent gain, and the third, J.C. Penney Co., said its sales climbed 8.8 percent.

Economists said the month-tomonth fluctuations in the flow of factory orders since March was another sign that the economy is slowing.

Discussing the retail figures, Jeffrey Feiner, an industry analyst with Merrill Lynch, said they "reflected weak patterns early in the month, which were somewhat due to lower-than-normal shoppingmall traffic, partially reflecting a higher level of consumer viewing of the Olympics, in addition to adverse weather in certain parts of the country.

But, he said, "In the third week of the month, particularly in those regions of the country where schools started early, the back-to-school selling season picked up favorable momentum.

Other evidence of the slowdown was given on Wednesday, when the government reported that the Index of Leading Economic Indicators had dropped 0.8 percent in July, following an even sharper 1.3percent decline in June. They were the first back-to-back declines in the forecasting gauge in two and a half years.

On Thursday, the Commerce Department said orders for durable goods, or products expected to last three or more years, rose 1.3 perdownward revision of a prelimanary report last week showing . 2.2-percent increase in durater goods orders. Orders for transportation equiment were up 4.9 percent, 172 strongest increase since a 6.5-pe cent gain in March. The July riwas attributed to the automotive and defense aircraft industries.

Orders for primary metals such as steel were up 7.7 percent, following large declines of 4.7 percent :: June and 10.3 percent in May. The largest decline was pos!... by nonelectrical machinery, which dropped 5.2 percent, the third dis crease in the last four months.

The drain on deposits has led the Federal Home Loan Bank Board to consider insuring all of FCA's de-Crowley, a senior vice president million profit a year earlier. The with Keefe, Bruyette & Woods in loss reflected merger expenses and posits, even those of more than $100,000. Normally, deposits are insured only up to $100,000. Avco to Recover Block of Stock From Leucadia

New York Times Service GREENWICH, Connecticut Avco Corp. says it has agreed to buy back a huge block of its stock held by Leucadia

National Corp.

Analysts said the agreement, under which Leucadia would make a profit of more than $22 million, was another instance of "greenmail." In such cases, a company threatens a takeover. prompting the target to buy back its shares for a premium. Avco will pay Lencadia nearly $100 million, including $94.7 million, or $35.75 a share, for 2.65 million Avco common shares. The agreement, announced Wednesday, also requires Avco to buy back some preferred stock and to pay $1.5 million to cover fees.

After the agreement, Avco's stock fell $4.75 a share Wednesday, to close at $31.25 on the New York Stock Exchange. David Liebowitz, an analys for American Securities Corp. in New York, attributed the decline to disappointment that Leucadia had not proceeded with its takeover bid, or that Avco had not sought a friendly merger with another company.

In a recent filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission, Kiewit-Murdock said there had been no determination of which assets would be sold. MARGARET MEAD: A Life

By Jane Howard, 527 pp. $19,95. Simon and Schuster, 1230 Avenue of the Americas, New York, N.Y. 10020.

WITH A DAUGHTER'S EYE: A Memoir of Margaret Mead and Gregory Bateson

By Mary Catherine Bateson. 242 pp. $15.95. Morrow, 105 Madison Avenue,

New York, N.Y. 10016. Reviewed by Paul Robinson

M ARGARET MEAD had two careers in a single lifetime. From her original field trip in 1925 until World War II she worked as a professional anthropologist, visiting primitive cultures in Samoa, New Guinea, and Bali, and publishing the analytic results of those visits in a series of monographs that established her as the pre-eminent figure in her discipline. Following the war, she allowed anthropology to drift to the periphery of her concerns as she turned her attention to a direct assault on The Great Issues of Our Time.

This fundamental dichotomy provides Jane This fundamental dichotomy provides Jane Howard with the organizing principle of her excellent biography: Mead's early career is treated chronologically, with careful attention to the particulars of each field trip, while the increasingly grandiose projects of the postwar years are lumped together by category. Moreover, Howard leaves no doubt that she considers the early career by far the more significant, and accordingly, it receives the lim's share of and, accordingly, it receives the lion's share of her attention. Her judgment in this matter, as in virtually all others, is impeccable.

Howard's biography is a triumph of industry, imagination, and literary grace. Above all, its portrait of Mead is utterly persuasive. We are spared none of the warts, but her fundatal decency is always kept firmly in view. The book also rewards its readers with many diverting revelations about the Mead persona. We learn, for example, that she loved to drink Scotch and smoke cigarettes, but uttered no oath stronger than "Fiddlesticks!"

When the definitive history of modern anthropology is written, Mead will probably occupy no more than a footnote in it. Neither as a theorist nor a practical ethnologist did she measure up to the giants of the discipline. Most of her ideas were derivative, and she never mustered the empirical patience to complete a first-rate piece of fieldwork. Yet few would quarrel with the verdict that Mead is the most important anthropologist of the 20th century. Her stature rests on her singular achievement of conveying the ideas of modern anthroplogy to an audience — both scholarly and popular - inconceivably wider than even the boldest of her colleagues had ever dreamed of. Mary Catherine Bateson is the only child of

Margaret Mead and Gregory Bateson. She is also a professor of anthropology at Amherst College. In these evocative and strangely mel-ancholy reminiscences, she draws almost exclusively on her memory and the ruminations it has inspired; she has not conducted interviews or consulted sources. Only during her first two years - from 1939 to 1941 - did her parents live together on a more or less sustained basis. Separated by different responsibilities during the war, they were reunited for an Indian summer of happi-ness in 1946, after which Bateson left the family for an affair with a dancer in New York. In 1949 he moved to San Francisco, divorcing

In 1949 he moved to San Francisco, dwording Mead the following year, Thereafter Catherine saw him primarily during summer visits to California, where they went campang together. Back in Manhattan, she was rused in a series of complex households, with Mead herself always providing the principle of continuity. She recalls her resentment at her mother's frequent absences, but above all she pays tribute to the qualities of intelligence, attenuveness, and love that Mead never failed to bring to their relaponship.

Appropriately, Bateson grew up very much in her mother's image. I mean not simply that she chose to become an anthropologist (after all, her father was an anthropologist, 100). Rather, as her book eloquently testifies, she took as her own Mead's fundamental intellectual commitments. Perhaps not surprisingly, the event that inspired her to complete this memoir was the publication last year of Derek Freeman's attack on her mother's first field-work; "Margaret Mead and Samoa: The Mak-ing and Unmaking of an Anthropological Myth." The Samoan trip was of course already ancient history before Mary Catherine Bateson was born, and, in any event, she had no special claim to expertise on the subject. But she recognized that Freeman had attacked not merely factual errors but many of the essential values that she and her mother shared in com-mon. "The debate," she writes, "discovered in me passions that I had not known I possessed. Freeman, fueled by accumulated venom, attacked and distorted ideas that I really do care about defending, ideas central to cultural an-thropology, that come to me from both par-

This graceful and often haunting book confirms our sense of Mead's humanity. Few mothers could hope to be remembered more fondly.

Copper is one of two politi-cally sensitive protection issues on which Mr. Reagan must decide before Election Day. In the other, steel, Mr. Reagan must decide by Sept. 24.

Despite the intervention of Clark and the ITC recommendation, the strong antiprotection position taken by the sub-Cabinet group makes it appear less likely that the president will choose trade barriers.

Credit Suisse First Boston Limited Agent Bank

Fisons Corp. of Bedford, Massa- fever, next year we'll do even chusetts, a unit of Fisons PLC of more." DG BANK: Successful in 1983. CONFIDENT FOR 1984.

Comments by the Chairman, Mr. Helmut Guthardt, in the 1984 Annual Shareholders' Meeting.

"For DG BANK and its Group, the year under review has been a successful one - as can be said for the whole German cooperative banking system (for which DG BANK acts as central bank, liquidity manager, and international arm) ...

"In 1983, the Group's total assets grew by 11.6 percent to almost DM 77.7 billion (equivalent to U.S. $28.5 billion) ...

"The Group's loan portfolio increased by 15.7 percent to DM 62.3 billion (U.S. $22.8 billion) ...

"International loans and money market deposits, at DM 14.0 billion (U.S.$5.1 billion), were up by 9.4 percent...

"Net interest earnings benefited from the fact that the rates for the Bank's resources declined faster and more markedly in 1983 than the rates for our assets. In conjunction with larger volume, this led to an increase in net interest earnings by more than 50 percent for the Group and by almost 60 percent for DG BANK...

"In our securities business, the number of orders executed for clients was 60 percent higher than in 1982. For German shares in particular, we recorded a sizeable increase of orders from our international clientele. In the field of new issues, the Bank lead-managed two domestic issues and acted as lead manager or comanager for 31 international issues. Our international commercial services also recorded a gratifying increase in net fee income...

"These results again enabled us to increase substantially provisions for loan risks, mainly country risks...

"The Group reports - as for the previous year - an after-tax profit of DM 100 million (U.S. $36.7 million). Another DM 70 million (U.S. $25.7 million) have been allocated to published reserves. We propose that the remaining profit be distributed as an (unchanged) dividend of 5 percent (tax-free for the recipients on account of the Bank's legal status as a public corporation)...

"Shareholders' equity, after an increase in the Bank's capital by DM 200 million to DM 766 million during the year under review, now amounts to more than DM 1.4 billion (U.S. $518 million) or 3.2 percent of the Bank's total footings - a ratio which we consider to be adequate in view of the fact that our balance sheet structure in part reflects our role within the German cooperative banking system

(with consolidated assets of DM 443.2 billion - equivalent to U.S. $162.7 billion – at year end 1983) ... "Activities and projects for the current year include plans to establish a securities brokerage firm in New York - in recognition of the substantial interest of our clients in the American stock market - and a merchant bank in Singapore which is to supplement the services of our branch there...

"The Groups' net operating profit for the first four months of 1984 was 12.5 percent above the 1983 average, including trading profits... "Barring unforeseeable changes in the international situation I am confident that DG BANK and its Group will be able to match last year's result in 1984..." Copies of the 1983 Annual Report

World Growing Menace

By Russell Baker NEW YORK — The news about carbon dioxide is bad. Apparently there is far more of it in the air than there used to be, because everybody burns a lot more coal and oil than we did 100 years ago, and the byproduct of that is carbon dioxide. All this excess carbon dioxide just might change the earth. We are talking about a gas that makes plants grow, and scientists are finding that while more of it makes plants grow faster, bigger and fatter, it does not increase the growth rate equally for all plants. You can see what this may lead to. Thistles 50 feet tall. Ancient oaks that don't reach your knee-words for what will happen: "In would have a telephone so that the competitive conditions of nature, there will be winners and los-Harvard plant ecologist. Dr. ask him for money. Fakhri Bazzaz, as reported in The New York Times.

Bazzaz is speaking of "catastrophic effects in some ecosys-tems." We must put aside the scientific double-talk and try to visualize what this might lead to.

Suppose, for instance, that tomato plants are among those that dominate, thanks to their sensitivity to carbon dioxide. Suppose there comes a time when everybody's tomato plants grow nine or 10 stories high.

If that possibility doesn't shake you, you are a cooler customer than I am. When I think about the coming of the 100-foot tomato plant, I am tempted to respond as my grandfather would have responded in 1904 if I had told him that someday tax chiselers would be able to leave the United States at breakfast, fly to Europe for lunch, then fly back to the United States in time for supper.

"I hope to God I never live to see anything like that," the old gentleman would have said. This is what I say to the 100-foot tomato plant. and don't bother telling me about all the advantages - how the tomatoes will be twice as big as pumpkins, and how there will be so much leaf that tomato worms will eat themselves to death without making a dent in the plant.

I know how these things work.

MOVING

Tomato plants 100 feet tall are bound to attract lightning. When you're caught out in a thunderstorm you'll have to remember not to stand under a tomato plant

If you're not hit by lightning, the thunder will probably shake down a lot of tomatoes twice as big as pumpkins. It wouldn't take many hits by those to ruin your best suit.

What's more, it is ridiculous to suppose that once tomato plants grow that big, tomato worms will remain their present size. As my grandfather understood, the size of the pest always expands to match the size of what it feeds on.

The old gentleman enunciated this principle shortly before his death in 1905 when Grandmother I can give you the scientific told him that someday every house people would no longer have to find paper, pen, envelope and These are the words of a stamps every time they wanted to

> "I hope to God I never live to see anything like that," he replied. And when Grandmother asked why, he said, "As long as I don't have one of those telephones, I'm too small a target to be hit by anybody who isn't both literate and organized, and you know how few of them there are.

The 100-foot tomato plant will swell the tomato worm just as the relephone has swollen the number of pests who can get at you for money without having to know how to write their own names.

I don't want my grandchildren living in a world where tomato worms grow eight feet long. Nobody does. This is why it's time we started getting all this carbon dioxide out of the air and into the sodapop bottle where it belongs.

As my grandfather would have said, "The world is being trans-formed too much already without giving carbon dioxide a free hand." He didn't say this, of course, because he knew nothing about carbon dioxide. He did say, though once when Grandmother told him Americans would someday be able to blow up not only the entire county seat, but also the whole world - "I hope to God I never live to see anything like that."

That I can live with. This carbon dioxide is something else.

RIPPLE HORSE CREEK Montana - With the slow brightening of the sky in the east shortly after 4 A.M. the ragged hulks of the mountains, some still carrying snow, start to take on shape. Gradually, the black mountainsides turn green as the sun touches thousands of towering pines with more and more light. The shape of the forest emerges to roll on as far as the eye can see in this isolated northwest corner of Montana. Dawn has come that way to many of these trees more than 30,000 times in the near century since they were

"Beautiful, ain't it?" said Wade Nixon, as he strapped on his large, rattling equipment belt, donned his green, rippled-steel hardhat and picked up bottles of oil and fuel. Then he hefted his big chain saw from the back of the pickup truck and started down the hillside.

The smiling Nixon is a freelance faller, a gypo, a sawyer or — as the men never call themselves — a lumberjack. He was hired to help harvest a section of Cripple Horse Creek, heavily infested with bugs, before rot sets in and the 90-year-old National Forest trees become worthless.

It is a job, falling big trees for the vast U.S. lumber market, that Nixon has done for 12 of his 31 years, despite the warnings of another faller, his father. The son's arms and legs bear the scars of chainsaws run wild. He has survived large limbs, dubbed widowmakers, plummeting silently

He has survived lightning storms and blizzards, encounters with bears and mountain lions and the bitter cold that penetrates even thick canvas trousers to sting his legs all day. He has also survived the cyclical sadness that so regularly strikes one-industry counties like Lincoln, at times throwing one man in three out of

But Wade Nixon doesn't know how, or whether, he will survive

It takes one cord of wood (a stack four feet tall, four feet deep and eight feet long) to make 942 one-pound books or 4,000 onegallon milk cartons. It takes 20 cords to build an average bouse.

Lumber prices, an indication of strength in the housing market, which affects many other indus-tries, have been falling for the past four months. The price of two-by-fours, for instance, which form the basic framework of single-family houses, has fallen from $201 per thousand board feet a year ago to $140. Although the Commerce Department announced last week that housing starts fell by 6.6 percent in July, the latest annual rate of 1.76 million units still seems high by historical standards. But, according to Michael Sumichrast. chief economist for the National Association of Home Builders, the figures mask some basic shifts. Hidden within the numbers is the fact that a growing proportion of housing starts come from multifamily units — long-term. hard-to-stop projects that use more cement than lumber. Single-family houses, more subject to the fears of consumers over inflation and mounting interest rates, have been dropping even faster, declining by 10.1 percent last month.

"Everything in housing is down in the last three months," adds Sumichrast. "Right now, the figures still seem high due to momentum. But come fall you'll see considerable down impact on the Sabador Dall, 80, suffered firstand second-degree burns of his right leg in a life that broke out m his bedroom while he was sleeping Thursday, his doctor said. Dr. Juan Garcia San Mignel said the painter's burns were not serious. The fire, which started about 5 A.M. in Dale's bedroom in his 12-century eastle at Pubol, Spain, apparently was caused by a short circuit in the dectrical installation of the castle. police said. His nurses said friends rushed into Dale's room after the fire was discovered and removed him from the chamber. Dali's health has been weak in recent months, the doctor said, adding that his patient was in good condition and was "resting peacefully."

The Philadelphia Eagles (5-11) under-went an even more drastic upheavel. Two starters, wide receiver Harold Carmichael and center Guy Morriss, were waived in the offseason. Mark Slater, Morriss's backup, and veteran quarterback Dan Pastorini also were released.

way when George Rogers (1,144 yards) suffered a series of early-season injuries. They discovered they had more than a blocker in Wayne Wilson (787 yards). The Los Angeles Rams (9-7) must fig-ure out what their 51-7 playoff loss to the Redskins means for this season. The Rams start with running back Eric Dickerson (1,808 yards) and have quarterback Vince Ferragamo (59 percent). But Ferragamo does not have much to pass to, and ended up with 23 interceptions. As the Redskins showed, it takes more than a running game to beat the league's best.
